

ABSTRACT

Systems and techniques for biomechanical analysis are described. Multiple sensors are used to detect different molecules and/or to analyze multiple samples. A property of the sensors changes in response to a target molecule. The change in the property is detected, which may 5 provide a measure of the concentration of the target molecule.